PLAQUES IDENTIFYING DESIGNATED HISTORICAL RESOURCES

Dear Historic Property Owner:

As the proud owner of a designated historical resource in the City of San Diego, you are encouraged to display a plaque identifying your property as an important part of San Diego's history. Plaques identifying historically designated properties must conform to the City of San Diego Historical Resources Board (HRB) specifications. The plaque must be oval in shape, in a size that fits with the building. The most often used size is 17" x 12"; however a smaller size is acceptable. The lettering must be bronze on a black or brown background. The plaque must contain the City Seal, name of the designated resource, such as: CHARLES A. MARTIN HOUSE, the date it was built, and the historic site number assigned by HRB staff. (See attached example.)

Property owners may contact City staff to the HRB to verify the historical name, date, and designation number of their property prior to placing an order for a plaque.
The following companies are approved vendors that follow the HRB specifications.
